SO, LET HER IN!
YOU LET HER IN!
I JUST GOT OUT OF THE SHOWER!
HOW IS THAT MY PROBLEM?!
BRIAN, IF YOU DON'T

Your net gear glasses can take you. They have GPS. I'll text you my address.

I set my eyes diligently on the slowing path under my feet and let the rest of the world fall away.

I just...

Hello?
Hi Cassie. Are you and David still going to the pier tonight?
Yeah. Not till six though. Are you okay?
Not really.
What's wrong?

Cassie and sip my ice tea.

Cassie's address shows up in my inbox and I put it into the GPS.

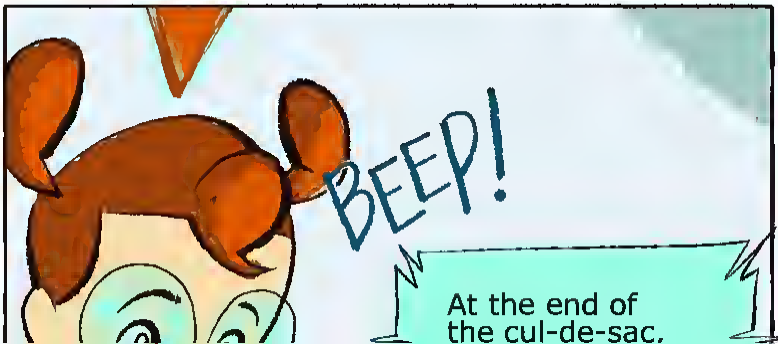
What kind of relationship could we have at this point?



BEEP!
At the end of the cul-de-sac,

SPACE BOY

LET HER IN, I WILL KNEE YOU IN THE STOMACH UNTIL YOU BARF!
FINE! I'M LETTING YOUR STUPID FRIEND IN!
AND GIVE HER AN ICE TEA! WITH LOTS OF SUGAR!
FINE!

Hold on a sec.

CASSIE! ONE OF YOUR FRIENDS IS HERE!

Inside, I wait for Sure.

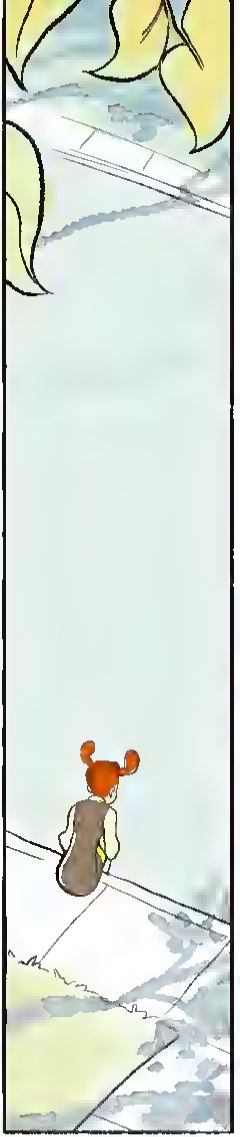
Mom doesn't set it.

Can I help you?
Oh. Hello.
Is Cassie there?

you have reached your destination.

While I wait for Cassie's text, I look up at the sky. I'm surprised to see the moon. I didn't know the moon came out in the day time.



It's just that our old home doesn't exist anymore. It's gone forever, buried in the past.

Even the Jemmah I knew is gone.

Then my net gear glasses display a route for me on the sidewalk using augmented reality.

That's what I realized last time I tried to call.
I love Jemmah.
But my Jemmah is no longer there anymore.
She's been replaced by a women who has lived most of her life without me.
